

Preface 9

A note on transliteration 11

Introduction 13

Part 1

Chapter 1: The poet and the literary field 29

1.1 Jāyasī as a ‘religious hero’ in hagiographical sources 30

1.2 The dates of the poet 34

1.3 The poet’s religious inspiration 37

1.4 Royal patronage and contemporary politics 45

1.5 The other works by Jāyasī 49

Conclusion 61

Chapter 2: Text, transmission and reception 71

2.1 Critical editions 71

2.2 Diversity: Script, circulation, context 75

2.3 Context and performance 78

2.4 Translations and adaptations 84

2.5 Modern reception 89

2.6 European reception 92

Conclusion 94

Chapter 3: The literary context of Padmāvat 101

3.1 A composite literary background 102

3.2 Specific models for Padmāvat 108

3.3 Sufi romances and other sources 110

3.4 Nāth yogī imagery 114

3.5 Padmāvat and the Persian maṣnavīs 120

3.6 Oral storytelling traditions in Persian 129

3.7 References to the story of Rām 132

Conclusion 142

Chapter 4: Structure and meaning in Padmāvat 149

4.1 The caupāi-dohā format 150

4.2 Division and structure of the narrative 153

4.3 Defects as structural elements 155

4.4 Intertext and variations on common narrative elements 162

4.5 The production of meaning: Indian and Persian aesthetic models 166

4.6 Setting the stage: The prologue and the description of Siṃhal 174

Conclusion 194

Part 2

Chapter 5: A poem of love 205

5.1 The representation of prem 205

5.2 Prem, sevā, sat and their dark mirror images 207

5.3 Love as sevā 209

5.4 The virtue of sat 221

5.5 The passion of joban 221

5.6 Viraha: The painful longing for love 226

5.7 Love and sacrifice 229

Conclusion 235

Chapter 6: The metaphoric scheme of light 241

6.1 Dawn of the divine light 241

6.2 The ruby, the diamond and the jewel 244

6.3 Padminī, the lotus-woman 247

6.4 Darkness and light, sun and moon 251

6.5 The experience of darśan 254

Conclusion 256

Chapter 7: The messenger 259

7.1 The locations of the story 259

7.2 Messengers and mediators as servants 261

7.3 Mediating the morals of service 265

Chapter 8: Conclusion: Jāyasī and the literary field 271

8.1 Circulation of culture 272

8.2 The perspective of the literary field 273

References 277

Appendix 295

Appendix 1: Adaptations and translations 295

Appendix 2: Gupta's selection of manuscripts 299

Appendix 3: Hindi text of the quoted stanzas and verses 300

Appendix 4: Outline of the contents of Padmāvat 331

Appendix 5: Interpretations of the 'two words' (stanza 652.8-9) 354

Glossary 357

Index 361