

Table of Contents

Chapter 1: Introduction	1
1.1 The Notion of Subject	1
1.2. Central problems and solutions	2
1.2.1. Plural Inanimate Subjects	2
1.2.2. Psychological Constructions	3
1.3. The Theoretical Frameworks	4
1.3.1. The Minimalist Program	5
1.3.2. Distributed Morphology	9
1.4. Background knowledge on Persian	12
1.5. Outline of the Book	19
Chapter 2: Animacy and Agreement Restriction in Persian	21
2.1. Introduction	21
2.2. Φ -Restrictions: Syntactic vs. Morphological accounts	22
2.2.1. Icelandic Quirky Subjects	22
2.2.1.1. Agreement patterns in Icelandic	24
2.2.1.2. The 3 rd person restriction on Nominative Objects	26
2.2.1.3. Sigurðsson's contributions	26
2.2.1.4. Anagnostopoulou's proposal	27
2.2.1.5. Stepanov (2003)	29
2.2.1.6. Boeckx (2000): a Morphological approach	31
2.2.2. Quirky Restriction on Spanish: a Morphological approach	32
2.3. Animacy in Persian	34
2.3.1. Constraint on the verbal agreement	36
2.3.1.1. On the nature of Impoverishment	39
2.3.1.2. Impoverishment and Blocking	41
2.4. Impoversihment proposal for Animacy Restriction	43
2.4.1. Karimi's proposal for Animacy Restriction	45
2.5. Summary	48
Chapter 3: Psychological Verbs and Multiple Subject Constructions	49
3.1. Introduction	49
3.2. Psychological Predicates	49
3.2.1. Experiencers as Mental Locations	51
3.3. Dative/Double Subject Construction in South Asian Languages	57
3.3.1. Double Subject Constructions	60
3.4. Categorical/Broad Subjects	64
3.4.1. Distinctions between the Left Peripherals	65
3.4.1.1. Left dislocation	65
3.4.1.2. Topicalization	65
3.4.1.3. Clitic left dislocation	66
3.4.1.4. Broad Subjects	66
3.4.2. Arguments for Subjecthood of Broad Subjects	67

3.4.3. Differences between Broad Subjects and regular Subjects	70
3.5. Dative Subject Constructions in South Slavic/Albanian	73
3.6. Summary	75
Chapter 4: Psychological Verbs in Persian and Applied Arguments	77
4.1. Introduction	77
4.2. High and Low Applicatives	77
4.2.1. Applicatives and Psychological Verbs	82
4.2.2. Light Verbs in Spanish Psychological Verbs	84
4.2.3. Possessor Applicatives	84
4.3. Psychological Constructions in Persian	88
4.3.1. Properties	90
4.3.2. Compound Verbs of Experience	94
4.3.3. Comparison of Compound Verbs and Psychological Verbs	97
4.3.3.1. Gerundive nominalization	99
4.3.3.2. Agentive noun formation	100
4.3.3.3. Adjectival formation	100
4.3.3.4. Participle adjective formation	100
4.3.4. Dabir Moghaddam's proposal	101
4.3.5. Ghomeshi's proposal	101
4.3.6. Subject-less Constructions	103
4.3.6.1. Inalienable Possessor Constructions	103
4.3.6.2. Inalienable Pseudo-Possessor Constructions	106
4.4. The Proposal for Persian Psychological Constructions	108
4.4.1. The Low Applicative Phrase	108
4.4.2. The Tense requirement	109
4.4.3. The Super High Applicative Phrase	110
4.4.4. Properties of the Experiencer	113
4.4.4.1. Reflexivization	114
4.4.4.2. Experiencers can appear to the right of adjuncts	114
4.4.4.3. Conjunction-reduction	115
4.4.4.4. Experiencers can be bare quantifiers	115
4.4.4.5. Experiencers can be controllers	115
4.4.4.6. Experiencers can be controllees	116
4.4.4.7. Arguments against movement of the Experiencer	116
4.5. Summary	118
Chapter 5: Concluding Remarks	121
References	123
List of Abbreviations	133